This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

Whatever may be thought of it in other respects, WHO'S WHO IN AMERICA can with confidence claim for itself the distinction of being something new in American book-making, for while, in its basic idea, it counterparts some well-known foreign publications, it has no American predecessor by which its merits may be judged or its faults condemned.

The title of the book sufficiently suggests that its compilation was mainly inspired by the well-known English annual, "Who's Who" (now in its fifty-second year); but comparison will reveal many modifications and changes of arrangement and treatment, adopted in order to make WHO'S WHO IN AMERICA more perfectly suited to American conditions and requirements.

The need of some such volume has long been apparent. Biographical compilations are by no means rare, and there are some excellent cyclopædias of that kind in which the notable lives of Americans, from Columbus to the man of a decade or so ago, are narrated. Mingled with them may be found a few sketches of the men of yesterday, and an occasional man or woman of to-day, surrounded by the obituary notices of dead and gone compatriots; but the nature of such large compilations precludes any attempt to keep up with the times so far as presenting daily sought for information regarding living men and women. The recognition of this fact has been the incentive to the compilation of this book of the living, the first of its kind to be made upon an American basis of American material. It has garnered in a new and fertile field, and if it has not gathered and brought in every sheaf, it can at least point to a well-filled granary of good American grain.

PREFACE

Whatever may be thought of it in other respects, WHO'S WHO IN AMERICA can with confidence claim for itself the distinction of being something new in American book-making, for while, in its basic idea, it counterparts some well-known foreign publications, it has no American predecessor by which its merits may be judged or its faults condemned.

The title of the book sufficiently suggests that its compilation was mainly inspired by the well-known English annual, "Who's Who" (now in its fifty-second year); but comparison will reveal many modifications and changes of arrangement and treatment, adopted in order to make WHO'S WHO IN AMERICA more perfectly suited to American conditions and requirements.

The need of some such volume has long been apparent. Biographical compilations are by no means rare, and there are some excellent cyclopædias of that kind in which the notable lives of Americans, from Columbus to the man of a decade or so ago, are narrated. Mingled with them may be found a few sketches of the men of yesterday, and an occasional man or woman of to-day, surrounded by the obituary notices of dead and gone compatriots; but the nature of such large compilations precludes any attempt to keep up with the times so far as presenting daily sought for information regarding living men and women. Yet the latter are precisely the persons whose careers are of the greatest interest to the largest number of people. The men who are making the history of the Nation, its States and its municipalities, who are creating American literature, educating the youth of the country, leading in its religious, scientific, commercial, social, military, naval, productive and artistic activities, and who are in the innumerable departments of useful and reputable effort most representative of American progress these are unquestionably the people of whom average American men and women desire to know most.

The recognition of this fact has been the incentive to the compilation of this book of the living, the first of its kind to be made upon an American basis of American material. It has garnered in a new and fertile field, and if it has not gathered and brought in every sheaf, it can at least point to a well-filled granary of good American grain.

The book is autobiographical, the data having been obtained from first hands in all save a very few cases, where, persistent effort having failed to elicit personally furnished facts, other sources of information have been used. Even where this has been done the sketch has been submitted for correction and has, in nearly every case, been revised or approved.

To gather, in this authoritative way, the vast amount of material which has been condensed and compressed into these pages has been both difficult and laborious. The task has, however, been lightened and brightened by many friendly words and much appreciative aid from those who have recognized the value of such a compilation. "That's the best book now being made in America," was the comment of a well-known and successful litterateur. "No book is more needed," said several, and hundreds more gave the same opinion in many and varied forms of statement.

Not every person approached for data exhibited a friendly spirit. A few complained that they had been victimized by various biographical schemes, which, beginning with an innocent demand for data, usually culminated in a bill for the insertion of the biography and perhaps for a portrait which accompanied it. These, however, were soon convinced of the entire absence of any commercial purpose, either in the selection of names or the insertion of the personal sketches in the present volume. Some objected that the title chosen for the book was too flippant, but a far larger number commended its preëminent fitness; some were afraid that the book would be too exclusive—others that it would place them in a too heterogeneous company. Some sent printed sketches in which their genealogy was traced through pages of small print, and insisted that notices of great length should be reproduced verbatim; others gave the briefest and most unsatisfactory responses. "I am really of no importance—your dictionary will be better for not including my name," wrote one of the foremost scientists, educators and authors of the country. "Do you really invite women to publicly confess their age—and then expect them to commend your book?" queried one distinguished authoress. "Wait until I am dead before you embalm me!" said a noted poetess. "Leave me out," curtly wrote a score or two of folk whose names were deemed requisite to the completeness of the work, and who were subsequently induced to furnish the desired information. The people who, from an excess of modesty or exclusiveness, tried to keep out of the book, were quite numerous; many supplied material with evident reluctance, and a few futilely offered to buy numerous copies of the book on condition that mention of them be omitted. Great persistence was often required to secure autobiographical data. A well-known Western journalist was written to several times without avail. Finally such facts as could be learned about him were compiled into as complete a sketch as possible, which was sent to him for revision. This brought a reply to the effect that he had received the various requests for biographical data and had avoided making any response to them because, while he was in the business of gathering information about others, he desired to escape public attention himself. He had, however, arrived at the conclusion that such persistent pursuers could not be evaded, and he therefore enclosed a correct sketch for fear that one would be printed in any event, and, if that must be, he wanted it accurate. Another wrote, "Such persistence as yours deserves to succeed." There were many similar cases, and there were also others who, having several times declined, subsequently wrote, voluntarily inclosing the requested information, with the statement that they had changed their minds and hoped they were not too late.

A still more numerous class, largely made up of those who had no claim whatever to be mentioned, tried to get into the work, frequently accompanying their requests by the offer of pecuniary inducements. It is needless to say that no attention was paid to these, and that not one line in this volume (outside of the legitimate advertising pages) has been paid for. Whatever may be its merits or demerits, WHO'S WHO IN AMERICA can confidently claim the virtue of being honestly and conscientiously compiled.

Some of those legitimately in the book showed an amiable disposition to secure like distinction for their friends. To this we owe mention of many people of worth who might otherwise have been overlooked But the solicitation also took wider scope. "I think you would do well to include my son, who will graduate from——College this year. He is a bright boy, and is sure to make his mark in the world," wrote one, with parental pride. "I think you make a mistake in confining your book to the living," wrote one lady, "my husband was one of the most distinguished men of his profession, and should be included." Many other letters might be cited to show how varied were the demands and suggestions that were made. Most of the recipients of letters of inquiry gave prompt and appreciative response, hundreds adding words of commendation of the undertaking. Out of the many thousands of communications received, not more than a score were discourteous, and only one was insulting.

In at least one case there was an effort to cast a glamour of romance over these veracious pages. A gifted space-writer, who has also been a writer of books of a mathematical cast, and should have known better, endeavored to secure the insertion of a statement that his ancestors in England had been attainted (in the eighteenth century under the house of Brunswick) for treason to the Plantagenets, and that his later and immediate family had, in 1876, recovered $30,000,000 from the United States Government for services in behalf of the American Revolution. These interesting statements, for which he was willing to become autobiographically responsible, show what an American man of 42 or so can do toward dimming the laurels of the late Baron Munchausen.

Nearly every person who has commented upon the outlined design of the book has recognized the obvious fact that the chief difficulty would be found in the selection of names: and it will doubtless be on the score of errors of inclusion or exclusion in this respect that the opportunities for criticism will be found most numerous.

As to names that will be missed it may be said that there were many persons who, though repeatedly requested to furnish information, persistently refused or remained silent. In a number of these cases data, believed to be entirely reliable, has been obtained from other sources, but in a few instances no facts regarded as trustworthy could be procured, and such names are, perforce, omitted altogether.

On the other hand it may be that errors of judgment have been made in using some names not fairly entitled to hobnob with such a goodly company. Yet standards differ. One very practical newspaper-man, in a letter on this question of selection, hoped that the book would not be too exclusive. It would, he said, be invaluable to the newspaper profession if the standard of admission was not placed too high. It is easy to get material about the few people of the very highest distinction, he argued, but not so easy in regard to people who, while less prominent, are likely to become subjects of newspaper comment.

To all criticisms of this kind, one way or the other, it can only be pleaded that the work has been thoughtfully done; that the most careful judgment has been exercised; that the friendly aid of men with specially excellent means of judging has been called into coöperation, and that no name has been purposely included or excluded for any other reason than the desire to make the book as complete and as useful as possible. It may, however, be well to state that there has been no effort to make of it a "blue book." It is not wealth or social standing, but rather achievement or public position which have been the criteria in choosing or discarding names.

It is likely that many will be inclined to criticise the inequality, in relative length, which the sketches present. Some of the most important people have been noticed in a few words, and others of much less prominence are treated at length. This is a matter, however, which cannot be regulated by the eminence or otherwise of the person discussed, but must in large measure depend upon the willingness of the autobiographer to supply details, and the character of his career, whether it has pursued an even course in a single vocation, or, as is frequently the case with Americans, has been varied by active participation in numerous divergent occupations, such as war, law, politics and literature. It has not been found possible to use every item supplied. Space requirements have often compelled condensation, while, on the other hand, numerous sketches would be improved by fuller details. The data furnished in individual cases has varied from a dozen words to fifty thousand.

The need of condensed statement has led to a free use of abbreviations, but this word-shortening has been done upon the simplest possible system, and a list of the abbreviations adopted has been given elsewhere to obviate any difficulty which may be experienced from their use.

One of the most valuable features of the book will be found in the appended addresses. No other work has attempted the laborious task of finding and furnishing the addresses of leading Americans in all parts of the world. This has been successfully accomplished in the present volume, making it not only a biographical dictionary, but also a handy directory of the best-known contemporary Americans. The difficulties overcome in the pursuit of accuracy in this respect will be better appreciated when it is stated that letters sent to the last address indicated by the most recent biographical publications, were returned by hundreds, and that, in many cases, from ten to fifteen letters were required before the right address could be found. One distinguished author wrote to say that he had lived several years in France, and that the letter of inquiry had been forwarded from a place where he had not been for twelve years. This, he justly said, furnished strong proof of the necessity of such a book as WHO'S WHO IN AMERICA.

While pursuing these inquiries many persons were found to be dead whose names were not listed in any accessible necrology. For this reason, while the book is intended as a record of the living, a death-roll has been compiled of Americans who have died since January 1, 1895, for the purpose of explaining the absence of many names which will be missed in the main body of the work.

In all, WHO'S WHO IN AMERICA contains concise biographical sketches of over eight thousand living men and women. It is a distinctively American array, although many of those mentioned were born abroad and some are foreign subjects. All live or have lived in the United States, or are so closely identified with American affairs or interests as to be subjects of American inquiry or discussion. Not all now live in this country, for nearly every land is represented in the addresses given, but those located abroad are either native Americans, or are in direct touch with some interest in the United States.

The exact number of persons biographically sketched is 8,602, but occasional names have only a few identifying words. These are people from whom reliable data could not be obtained, but who belong to some class arbitrarily included in the category of Who's Who folk. Thus the volume aims to embrace, ex-officio, all members of the Fifty-sixth Congress; all governors of the States and Territories now in office; all United States judges; all judges of State and Territorial courts of highest jurisdiction; also persons of other prominent official classifications; all National Academicians; all members of the National Academy of Sciences; all heads of the larger universities and colleges, and a few others chosen upon similarly arbitrary lines. Special effort has been made to include all living American authors of books of more than ephemeral value. Yet it is well to state that a few literary people have been omitted because it was found impossible to secure their present addresses.

It was at first intended to cover the Canadian as well as the American field, and data was secured from several notables of the Dominion with that end in view. But it was finally decided to confine the undertaking within strictly "American" limits, and therefore only Canadians who have been identified with the United States in some way have been retained.

It is the present purpose to make such periodical revisions of WHO'S WHO IN AMERICA as seem to be called for by the demands of those who find it useful. For this reason it is requested that suggestions of improvement, revisions of biographical data, notices of changes of address, deaths, etc., be sent in as they occur.

Without claiming infallibility or inerrancy, it is believed that this publication will be a welcome addition to the list of handy helps that make up the library of indispensable books. Certainly nothing has been omitted that painstaking care, persistent effort, or expenditure of money could supply toward making the volume fully fill the purposes of its compilation.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The valuable helps and suggestions which have been extended to the publishers of WHO'S WHO IN AMERICA have been so numerous that it has not always been found possible to give current acknowledgment of these courtesies. Occasion is here taken, therefore, to express grateful recognition of these favors. Especially valuable aid was given by Dr. W J McGee, of the Bureau of American Ethnology, whose painstaking and judicious selection of about one thousand names of scientific people has made that feature of the book exceptionally strong.

The list of those who have rendered valuable aid should also include: Mr. Ripley Hitchcock, the author and litterateur, of New York; Prof. Herbert Baxter Adams, of Johns Hopkins University, secretary of the American Historical Association; Dr. W. B. Atkinson, secretary of the American Medical Association; Mr. Frederick Grant Gleason, composer; Mr. Lyman B. Glover, musical and dramatic critic; Prof. Frank Parsons, of Boston University; Mr. John Vance Cheney, poet and librarian; Dr. Irving A. Watson, secretary of the New Hampshire State Board of Health; Mr. Harrison Grey Fiske, editor of The New York Dramatic Mirror; and also the principal librarians and newspaper and magazine editors in all parts of this country and abroad.

Besides individuals the following firms have also at many times rendered aid in furnishing names and addresses, forwarding letters, supplying information, and in other ways:

EDUCATIONAL STATISTICS

Following a suggestion which seemed to contain within it much of value, an effort has been made to ascertain the educational advantages enjoyed by the people mentioned in this volume, as far as such statistics could be collated from the various autobiographical statements. In all there are 8,602 people embraced in the compilation. The educational inquiry has necessarily been kept down to certain defined limits, and only partial discrimination could be made. Thus it will be found that of the total, 3,970 are disclosed as educated in colleges and universities. Some of these have attended several colleges, but each name could only be counted once as to general education, and no account has been kept of post-graduate degrees or courses. Of the collegians about eighty per cent took baccalaureate degrees. This, of course, includes graduates of the smaller colleges as well as of the great universities.

The figures of those below collegiate grades indicate, in each case, the highest class of institutions attended by the number of persons enumerated.

The graduates in technical and professional schools are in some cases also enumerated in the statistics of general education, while in other cases physicians, clergymen, lawyers, etc., have given the details of their professional preparation, but have omitted all other reference to their educational career.

Those enumerated as having furnished no scholastic details are not covered by any of the other items, the absence of information in these cases including both general and special education. The figures ascertained are as follows:

3237	graduates of universities and colleges conferring baccalaureate degrees in letters, science or philosophy.
733	others attended like institutions but were not graduated.
693	closed their scholastic career in academies, seminaries and other institutions of secondary grade.
79	finished in normal schools.
171	have a high-school education.
640	have merely common or public school education.
185	were privately educated.
20	are self-taught.
298	were educated in foreign institutions.
1307	furnish no educational data.
553	graduated in medicine.
265	graduated from technical schools as engineers, architects, chemists, agriculturists, etc.
378	are theological graduates.
336	graduated from law schools.
109	graduated from the U. S. Naval Academy.
9	naval officers were not graduated as such.
168	graduated from the U. S. Military Academy.
35	military officers were not graduated as such.
29	artists received their education at the National Academy of Design.

As to the last item it may be stated that it was found impracticable to designate in a general way the various degrees of artistic preparation either in painting, sculpture, music, the drama, etc., because these arts have in large measure been learned from individual instructors.

After presenting the figures, their significance must be largely left to individual deduction. Yet some features are especially prominent. Assuming that the names from which these figures are compiled represent a fair selection from the best known men and women of the country, they speak most convincingly of the value of education as a factor in success. The 1,307 who furnished no educational data include a large number of persons whose present occupations or avocations indicate that they, too, must have received the benefits of higher education, and if they had all supplied scholastic statistics the relative number in each grade would probably have undergone no material change. For purposes of comparison these and the 298 educated abroad may be eliminated, and only the first eight items and the naval and military graduates be considered, making a total of 6,029 out of a grand total of 8,602 in the entire list of names.

Of this 6,029 only 205 (20 self-taught and 185 privately educated) did not attend schools; and only 640 of the others stopped with the instruction they received in the public schools. This is no argument against the common schools of the country, however, because nearly all who are in the higher classifications began their education in public schools and from them passed into the academic and collegiate institutions. The strong fact is that so large a proportion of the whole have had the advantages of the higher education.

In regard to professional education it will be seen that there are only 336 graduates from law schools, although there are 860 practising lawyers represented in the book, and of the 847 clergymen in active pastorates and hundreds in other associations, only 374 are graduates of theological seminaries, showing that the special preparation in these professions has been very largely carried on under private tuition.

This educational inquiry might, of course, be carried much farther, so as to even more completely cover, as one scientific man suggests, "compiled statistics showing where the various people came from, and what sections and institutions had given us the most eminent men in the several lines." It might also be found what proportion came from the country and the cities respectively (doubtless with a preponderance in favor of rural youth), while as to present residence the balance would, without question, be in favor of city and suburban homes. It has not been found practicable for lack of time and space, to compile all these and other statistics suggested by an examination of the book, but a mention of them may serve to indicate many useful purposes to which it may be put, aside from its main object as a work of reference.

In the foregoing table are represented, besides the 45 States, 5 Territories and the District of Columbia, 67 foreign countries. The value of the compilation lies, of course, in the character and classification of the people enumerated, comprising a carefully selected list of those who are best known as representatives of the better and higher interests and activities of the United States. The table is useful as indicating where people of this kind come from, and where their activities center. Summarizing, it appears that of the 8,602 people, 7,320 are natives, 974 foreign-born, and 308 furnish no data as to birth-place. As to present location, 8,345 are in the United States, 243 abroad and 14 are not located. In regard to those abroad it should be remembered that army and navy officers, on duty in foreign countries, are not included, it having been made a rule to give all military addresses as in care of the War Department, and naval officers in care of the Navy Department, because of the frequent changes of address made by soldiers and sailors in active service. Therefore if the military and naval officers in Cuba, Puerto Rico and the Philippines be added, the total of those abroad would be increased materially.

Of the American States and Territories, only Alaska, Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Oklahoma, South Dakota and Wyoming fail to contribute to the birth-list; but all are represented in the column showing present location.

Of the 67 foreign countries (including the German Empire as only one), 61 are contributors to the birth column, and 34 to the present residence list.

The largest numbers in the birth-place column are furnished by New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Maine, Connecticut, Illinois, Virginia, England and Vermont, in order named, these including all which have furnished 200 or more names to that list; while the only foreign countries having over one hundred in the birth-place figures are England, with 210; Germany, with 166; Canada, with 119, and Ireland, with 106. The latter country has no representation in the second column, which would seem to indicate that Americans do not, to any important extent, seek the Emerald Isle as a place of permanent residence.

A tendency toward the great centers of population is plainly disclosed by the table, this being especially true of New York, Washington and Chicago, the largest numbers in the present location column being those for New York, District of Columbia, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, New Jersey and California, in the order named. Both Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, however, show a falling off in the second column from the figures in the first, and the same is still more strongly true of Ohio, Maine, Vermont and New Hampshire. The gain in New York from the first to second column is unquestionably due to a concentration of leading workers and thinkers, in literary, artistic, commercial and other lines, in New York City. The District of Columbia owes its prominence in the second column to the large number of government officials and employés in Washington. But the figure 724 does not include the senators and congressmen, who have been, in each case, included among the residents of their respective home States. The Illinois figures, which show more than twice as many in the second as are in the first column, speak very pertinently of the growth of Chicago as a center of attraction for people of "Who's Who" characteristics during the past decade or so.

New England makes a very strong showing as a good section to be born in, and each one of the six Eastern States has furnished a goodly quota to the first column, the total for New England being 1,839 or 21.37 per cent of the whole while of the second column it has only 1,232, or 14.32 per cent. New York, however, has 18.62 per cent in the first, and 23.70 per cent in the second row of figures. The Southern States furnish 1,429, or 16.61 per cent to the birth-place column, and 1,202, or 14 per cent to the other.

While the Americans located abroad are widely scattered over the earth, their numbers are not large, being only 243, or less than 3 per cent, who are permanent residents in foreign countries. Of these 59 (largely literary) live in England, and the next largest items are 32 in France and 23 in Italy (in both cases principally artists). Taken as a whole the table indicates that American men and women who attain more than local distinction are content with the United States, but have some tendency toward concentration in the larger cities of the country. There is also, however, a strong westward movement, commensurate with the general growth in population, and Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin and all States west of the Mississippi river (including Louisiana) present, in each case, an increase from the first to the second column of figures. Outside of these the only States, etc., showing larger figures in the second than in the first column are the District of Columbia, Florida, New Jersey, New York, and Rhode Island. West Virginia is the only State for which the two columns are evenly balanced.

The table, as it stands, embodies numerous other suggestions, but the foregoing will, perhaps, be sufficient to indicate its significance in a general way.

As to the last item it may be stated that it was found impracticable to designate in a general way the various degrees of artistic preparation either in painting, sculpture, music, the drama, etc., because these arts have in large measure been learned from individual instructors.

After presenting the figures, their significance must be largely left to individual deduction. Yet some features are especially prominent.
